plow, and later as an engineer on a steam pump.

He enlisted in the Engineer Corps of Company E, 6th Battalion.

Two letters were lately received from him. On Nov. 24th he wrote from Camp Lewis, Washington, and ended by saying, "Many loves and kisses to my mother. Well, good bye, till we see each other in France. Ha! Ha!"

The last letter he wrote home was sent to J. M. Medeiros, his brother-in-law and was written on Y.M.C.A. stationery with the heading "Co. E-6 B'n-20 Engineers, Camp American University, W. D. C. 1/2/18. This letter described the trip East, and the camp. He said: "The ground here is all covered with snow and ice. The snow drops down like as if it was raining. Some of the boys that came up with me on the same trip are going to leave tonight for France. I suppose I'll be going, too, in a short while. From now on it's hell, but it's all in a life time."

Mrs. Martins and her children are the center of a great deal of sympathy expressed by all the people of this island. Particularly since the news was published in the Daily Wireless the people of Paia have constantly been asking the question, "Is it true?" Gordon Ramos received not long ago an excellent picture of his brother in uniform and he has carried it about with him since the news came in order to show all inquiring friends.

A Young Hawaiian Observes Konohi

A well known, young Hawaiian, of Wailuku, caused his friends considerable anxiety early in the week by pulling off a "mysterious disappearance" act.

The fellow is employed by the Kahului railway in connection with the shipping end of the business. Before going out last Saturday the Claudine accidentally rammed a scow. This man and others were set to work on Monday repairing it. The hero of this story, if such he may be called, got very wet and was given a dollar by the luna and told to go home, get some dry clothes and "rest up."

He started out and changed clothes all right, but that was the last seen of him at Kahului or even at his home for more than two days. A search was instituted, but without avail, and the police were notified. No trace of the missing man could be found, so drowning, foul play and all sorts of bad things were being suspected.

Thursday morning, however, he showed up for work, in fit condition and as calm as though nothing had happened.

He explained that when he went out in Wailuku he found his Chinese friends celebrating "konohi," and as he did not like to see a good thing like that drag for lack of support he jumped in to help it along. It took him the two days to make a good job of it.

Planters May Ask Receiver For Hana Cane

ers had thrown across the street in Hana, calling attention to the patriotic duty of everybody in the present war emergency and charging officials of the plantation with disloyalty to those principles. This banner was, upon advice, taken down.

The gratifying news is brought that any possibility of an open strike is past and that all differences will be determined by the courts.

The trouble at Hana, between the plantation and the contract growers of cane, started several months ago, when dissatisfaction was expressed by the latter with the agreements under which they were growing cane for the mill. It developed in time that some of the growers had no contracts at all, and were operating under verbal agreements only. However, they all agreed to make common cause of the matter, and a near-strike came about. In course of time matters quieted down, and the questions involved have been moving slowly toward the courts.

Leadership Of Lincoln

"The Leadership of Lincoln" was the sermon topic at the Makawao Union Church Sunday morning. The Rev. A. Craig Bowdish said in part that there are three phases of Lincoln's leadership which stand out with great clearness. First, that any faithful home may furnish a leader of the people. The log cabin in which he was born and which is now preserved as a memorial is a symbol of democracy and the worth of humanity. Second, that his mother, Nancy Hanks, was a large factor in Lincoln's early history and getting started right in life. His fundamental principles of morality and justice he gained from her. She was from an obscure family, but a woman of noble purpose which she was able to impart to her son. She represents the type of friendship, of comradeship which gives right inspiration and direction to young life. Third, that as the years go by there is a greater appreciation of moral and spiritual leadership of Lincoln. He has a sane and simple analysis of life that rings true in all his varied activities, whether splitting rails or keeping store or studying law or as captain in the Blackhawk war or in public speaking. For high principle he was willing to fail of election to the legislature. It was the same when Stephen A. Douglas defeated him for the United States Senate. He was inflexible for the right. In time the nation saw it and claimed his leadership.

Other men have been in high favor for a time, but have been forgotten later. Not so Lincoln. No one else perhaps has been so much quoted during this Great War by the British leaders. Britain herself has chosen the leader for her hour of crisis from a little known Welsh home. Mr. Lloyd George has time and again quoted from and referred to Lincoln's career and his writings. Lincoln's patience, his calm insight, his sense of justice and mercy, were never more appreciated than today when the spirit, the morale, the noble purpose of a race or people mean so much in the international questions and struggle of the world.

"The Greatest Thing In The World"

The text for the sermon, preached by Rev. J. Charles Villiers, at the Church of the Good Shepherd, on Sunday morning, was taken from the epistle for the Sunday before Lent, I Corinthians, chapter 13, as he said, a remarkable chapter, in a remarkable epistle. The text was the last verse of the chapter: "And now abideth faith, hope, love, these three; and the greatest of these is love."

There are some texts of scripture that are infinitely greater in their own simplicity of statement than any exposition of them, by modern priest or prophet, could ever make them. That might, perhaps, be said of any text chosen from this thirteenth chapter of St. Paul's first epistle to the Corinthians, whose teachings if sincerely believed in, and practiced, by every member of the Church would have a wonderful, moral effect on a multitude of men and women, who, at present, pay no serious heed to the Church. In writing as he did in this chapter, St. Paul beautifully exemplified his own teaching, for the treatment which had been accorded him, by not a few members of the Corinthian church, had been as might well have turned his thought from "faith, hope, and love" to doubt, despair, and hatred. The secret of his willingness, and power, to write as he did, is in the love of which he writes.

To feel love in our hearts, is to be able to express it in our lives, in word, and in deed. When love is in the soul, God is, and when God is in the soul, then the spirit of His will, is, also. It is when we steel our hearts against love that we become wrong-headed, as well as wrong-hearted.

Of all things to be feared in connection with the present war, nothing is more to be feared, than that it may lead to the victorious nations to pursue, under the plea of self-interest, a policy of international commercial, and industrial relations, fundamentally at variance with the true principles of the brotherhood of man. A league of nations is desirable, and most desirable, if its supreme aim is "to make the world safe for democracy," and to secure a better application, than the world has yet had, of the principles of brotherhood and love, to international politics, commerce, and industry. If the war aims enunciated by President Wilson, by Lloyd George, and other leaders, are to be carried out with any breadth of moral vision, brotherhood and love must play a larger part, around the coming peace table, than national self interest and gain. That is not to say that there must not be reparation for wanton destruction, and wicked wrong, to Belgium, to Serbia, and to other nations, by those who have been the aggressors in this war. Love itself, the common love of humanity, would demand that. But it does mean that in the negotiations at the peace conference, to which we all are anxiously looking forward, justice may be tempered with mercy, however underserving the supplicants may be, and all attempts to gain some selfish end may be ruled out. That for which we and our allies are fighting concerns itself with the souls and spirits of men, with their lives and liberties. We are in war, impelled by inner constraint, as much, and more, than we are by outward compulsion. And that inner constraint, writ large, spells love, far more than it does hatred. Whatever of fear we had as to our own future, should Germany be victorious in the present war, we were called to arms by the ties of brotherhood and love against the wrongs of our fellow men, against a tyranny which, if it is not curbed, and broken will debase, degrade, and ruin civilization. We are confronted, not with a theory, but with a condition, which threatens the enslavement of the lives and liberties of men and nations. It was the noted Frenchman, author of "The Simple Life," whose name and whose book, twenty years ago, was a household word, who said, "what is the disease from which our entire civilization suffers, but want of love?" Yes, that is what ails civilization, and so serious has become the disease that, in the words of Isaiah: "the whole head is sick, and the whole heart faint." But there is hope of recovery, and of new life for civilization in the very sacrifice and brotherly love which the war is demanding. To talk about love in connection with war may seem strange. What possible connection can there be between the two? Hate in war, we know there is. Abominable hate, disgusting, degrading, destroying hate. But the obverse side of hate in war, is love, and love is greater than hate. Love is of God, the Divine, and enduring principle of life. "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friend." The war as it is waged by the allied nations, and by no nation more than by America, is waged, not for territory, nor perishable wealth, but for humanity, and right. It is for this reason that the future is with the Allies for Love will outlive hate and triumph over it at the last, and Love has faith and hope on its side.
